Company Provides Children with Packs Filled with Hygiene Products at PLAY Campaign Events

MELVILLE, N.Y., June 11, 2018 /PRNewswire/ -- Henry Schein, Inc. (Nasdaq: HSIC) today announced that it is joining forces with the Professional Baseball Athletic Trainers Society® (PBATS), the Taylor Hooton Foundation, and Major League Baseball (MLB) players for the sixth consecutive year to help kids understand the importance of eating right, staying fit, making healthy choices, and visiting their doctor and dentist regularly.

As part of PBATS' Promoting a Lifetime of Activity for Youth (PLAY) Campaign, Team Schein and its partners are hosting events throughout the baseball season for children and teenagers at MLB stadiums. Since its inception in 2004, 25,000 children have participated in hundreds of PLAY Campaign events hosted by all 30 MLB teams. A full overview of this year's campaign can be found here.

As part of its support, Henry Schein's Athletics and Schools business and its supplier partners provide the approximately 200 children and teenagers who attend each event with a drawstring pack containing sunscreen, toothpaste, toothbrush, dental floss, Mueller's No Glare® Eye Black Strips, mouthguard, Thera-Band Exercise Bands, Clorox® 2oz. Hand Sanitizer and Disinfecting Wipes On the Go, and a score card to track their teeth brushing, hand washing, and other healthy habits. The product donation is an initiative of Henry Schein Cares, the company's global corporate social responsibility program. The Henry Schein Cares Foundation also provides a monetary donation in support of the program.

"We are very pleased to again partner with Henry Schein and the Henry Schein Cares Foundation as we work together in our shared mission of improving the health of children now and in the future," said Mark O'Neal, PBATS President and Director of Medical Operations for the Chicago Cubs. "With their support, PBATS is able to teach kids that regular exercise, proper nutrition, and healthy choices will improve their health now, and for years to come."

As part of each PLAY Campaign event, community organizations invite select children to participate in games, drills, and other activities led by the host team's athletic training staff. The events are designed to emphasize the importance of strength and conditioning, injury prevention, proper nutrition, and avoiding the dangers of performance-enhancing drugs (PEDs). Children then meet with MLB ballplayers to discuss the importance of making healthy decisions and staying PED-free.

"Team Schein is pleased to join PBATS, the Taylor Hooton Foundation, and Major League Baseball for another fun-filled season of helping to educate children on why it's important to live healthy," said Jeff Klingler, Vice President, Enterprise Health, Henry Schein Medical. "With the support of our supplier partners, each child will go home with the personal care supplies they need to make the healthiest choices possible. And with the help of their favorite ballplayers, we can help set them on the path to a lifetime of good overall health."
