The following are excerpts of a transcript from an earnings call on August 6, 2018:

Stanley Bergman: We are on track with our efforts to prepare for the plan spin-off of our global Animal Health business with Vets First Choice and a combination with Vets First Choice, which will create a new publicly-traded company to be named Vets First Corp. We believe this transaction will unlock shareholder value for Henry Schein shareholders as Vets First Corp. will be well positioned to achieve a premium market valuation ... Our team is working diligently to prepare for the spin-off of our global Animal Health business and the simultaneous merger with Vets First Choice to create, as noted earlier in the conversation, Vets First Corp. While we are working towards a goal of closing by the end of calendar 2018, it is possible that the closing may slip into the first quarter of 2019. We believe that Vets First Corp. will provide veterinarians with a powerful new platform to grow their practices. Of course, through improving client engagement and, of course, driving better health care outcomes.

Jeffrey Johnson: And then as a follow-up question, just on the minority interest, you bought out, I think, the remainder of the Vet minority interest shares in a couple different businesses. When was that complete? Is the minority interest line we saw at about $6 million reduction, is that a fair way to think about going forward? And the corollary on that, if it is, it looks to me like embedded in your guidance then is that margins may be down a bit still in the second half of this year. We were thinking they might be closer to flat. So can you maybe help us connect kind of the moving parts there and buying out those minority interest? And how to think about margin over the back half of this year?

Steven Paladino: Sure. The benefit for minority interest will be a bit greater in the second half because it's basically composed of 2 areas. First is the Henry Schein Animal Health buy out of the minority interest, which is only a partial quarter benefit because we did it during Q2. I think it's sometime in the April or early May timeframe we did it. We completed it.

Kevin Ellich: And then for Steve, Animal Health business remains very strong. Can you give us a little color on the competitive landscape? Did you say that the spin-off could slip in early 2019?

Steven Paladino: Just on the second part of your question, Kevin. So no real significant changes in the competitive landscape in Animal Health that are going to people's attention. And the second part of your question on Animal Health, we did say that it is possible that the spin closes in early Q1. We're still shooting for late Q4 closing. The thing that we really can't predict with great certainty is how long it will take the registration statement to go through SEC and how long it will take to respond to whatever comments the SEC has. And that's why because we can't control that and that could be a reasonably short process or a longer process, depending on their questions and comments. So for that reason, we say it's possible it could slip into Q1.

The following is an excerpt of a transcript from an interview with CNBC on August 6, 2018, a copy of which will be posted on the Company's website:

Interviewer: And you are spinning off and merging that vet business. How's that process going?

Stanley Bergman: So we are spinning off our Animal Health business into a separate public company and merging it with Vets First Choice to create a leading provider of products and related services to veterinarians. Very, very excited about that. I think the opportunity to drive more pets into the veterinary office is quite high with this joint venture that is now going to be spun off.

Interviewer: The pet market's been a hot investment. We've seen a lot of M&A, a lot of deals, a lot of everything around that space right now. How are you valuing that?

Stanley Bergman: Well, of course the baby boomers are buying more pets and the millennials are also investing in pets so it's a great area to be in.
